BLESS ME!

BY BEN BLOOMER. Bless me! bless me, what a stew!
Three huge, hooped lasses in my pew—
Oh! what can this poor body do—
New I am "done for."
Mixed up with faces half divine,
Surmounting stacks of crinoline,
My feelings I cannot define,
I fain would run for
Some calm and quiet, hone retreat,
Where I could hear my "buzzum beat,"
Where "moonshine" is the food they eat,
And "nothing shorter."
Aye to rolieve my quaking frame—
To hide the blushes of my shame—
As sure as Bloomer is my name,
I'd "take to water!"
And yet I cannot—here am I,
Fast as a "porker in a sty."
Too jummed to staile, too seared to cry—
Oh, goodness, gracious!
Great Cusar on the Tiber's side,
With nought sustaining by his side,

With nought sustaining by his side, Was not more troubled when he cried Oh, "help me Cassins!" When will the lusses "change their ways"—

When will the lasses "change their ways"—
The fashion's most unfriendly phase—
Den kabits of "pod anger days"—
Devounty prayed for!
The good old easy times renew,
When eight sat singly in a pew,
With room for circulation through,
And none afraid for
The sudden stoppage of the tide
That sets propelling power aside,
And makes one crank and ballet-eyed—
An unhinged human!
When will they? Oh, most potent Princets!
